STROUDSBURG, Sept. 30.—Monroe county churchmen rallied today to the defense of Calvin C. Gorgy, county detective, on trial in the criminal court here for the shooting of James Settimio, of Bala, Pa. The latter was shot to death in the Delaware House, one of the best known inns of Delaware Water Gap, on Labor Day.

For the murder of Settimio, who was proprietor of the hotel, Gorgy is being tried on a charge of murder before Judge Samuel E. Shull and a jury. The detective, a dry crusader, was indicted by a grand jury for manslaughter yesterday and immediately placed on trial.

A night session of court was held last night to expedite the trial and seven witnesses were heard before adjournment.

While the trial was in progress last night, friends of the dry crusader were active among church folk in an effort to raise funds for his defense. Members of the Stroudsburg Presbyterian Church revealed that all denominations have been asked to join in a concerted effort to raise large sums for that purpose.

In this connection they said they had received letters which read:

"We have to raise $500 or thereabouts to help pay the bills for the defense of Calvin Gorgy. The Methodists have started the ball rolling, but they cannot do the whole job, and of course we Presbyterians and all other denominations will have to help."

No intimation so far has been given as to the nature of the defense. "The defense will be interesting," was all that Attorney David Skillman, of Easton, chief counsel for Gorgy, would say. He is aided by Arlington Williams, vice-president of the Monroe County Sunday School Association.

"Gorgy is in a bad predicament and we ought to do our best to help him. Certainly he has done a good, courageous job in endeavoring to keep our county clean and we admire him for it. Will you please send me a check to help the cause along? We must stand with Gorgy to the best of our ability."

Mailing of the letters came to light when the Commonwealth in selecting the jury, asked each talsman if they had been recipients of a letter asking (Continued on Page 4)

Wedding at St. Ann's Is Very Pretty Affair

Yesterday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock a pretty wedding took place in St. Ann's Catholic Church, when Miss Catherine Cicerchia, daughter of Patsy Cicerchia, of Italy, who resides with her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Amedeo Pezzula, 327 Penn street, became the bride of Amedeo Carosi, of Holmesburg, son of Jesper Carosi, of Italy. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father Marcellino Romagno, rector of the church, and Miss Frances Tamburella, of Dorrance street, played the wedding march.

The maid of honor was Miss Rose Mauro, of 325 Penn street; and the bridesmaid was Miss Lucy Pezzula, of 327 Penn street, a cousin of the bride.

The gown worn by the bride was of ivory tone satin, fashioned with a v-shaped neck-line front and back, sleeveless, tight-fitting bodice and long flared skirt. A large flower of the material was worn on the right shoulder. Her slippers were white satin with fancy buckles. And her veil of tulle edged with lace, was cap shape trimmed with orange blossoms. She wore long white gloves and carried a shower bouquet of white roses and lilies.

The maid of honor and the bridesmaid were attired in gowns made alike. The bodices were tight-fitting and sleeveless. The necklines featured the v-shape both front and back and were trimmed with rhinestones. The skirts were very long and full.

Miss Mauro wore a pretty shade of orchid satin, with slippers and Greta Garbo horse-hair hat trimmed with ribbon to match her gown, and she carried a bouquet of pink carnations tied with orchid satin ribbon. Miss Pezzula's gown was light green satin, with slippers and Greta Garbo hat to match, and she carried a bouquet of pink roses tied with green satin ribbon.

A reception was held at Beneficial Hall, Franklin street, where 100 guests were in attendance. During the evening the happy couple left for a honeymoon to be spent in Atlantic City. Mrs. Carosi traveled in a brown crepe coat dress with egg-shell blouse, brown felt hat, slippers, gloves and handbag. Upon their return they will reside at 322 Dorrance street. The bride and groom received many beautiful wedding gifts.

Happily Divorced!

Instead of employing the customary "happily married" expression, this couple is joyous because they are "happily divorced"—or are going through the well-oiled process developed by Reno, Nevada. Dorothy McMartin, perched on top of "Friend Husband's" shoulders at Reno, gives more of an impression of having just been married instead of waiting for a divorce in the oasis of single blessedness.

McENTEE CONVICTED ON MANSLAUGHTER CHARGE

JURY PLEADS MERCY

DOYLESTOWN, Sept. 30.—At a session of night court on Monday evening a jury returned a verdict of guilty in the case of Alvin McEntee, Bridgeton township lumberjack, charged with involuntary manslaughter and failing to stop and render assistance to a person injured in an automobile accident, but recommended mercy from the court in pronouncing sentence. The case was tried before President Judge Hiram H. Keller.

The jury in the case with J. Hart Jamison, of Ivyland, the foreman, deliberated for more than two hours. When a verdict had not been reached late yesterday afternoon, court took a recess until last evening when the sealed verdict was read shortly before 8 o'clock.

McEntee was released under bail after a motion had been filed by his attorneys, Stace B. McEntee and Webster Achey, asking for a new trial.

This is the second time in two weeks that McEntee has been convicted in criminal court. Last week he was acquitted of involuntary manslaughter and convicted of driving an automobile while drunk. Monday the Commonwealth presented evidence to substantiate their contention that an automobile truck driven by McEntee, fatally injured Officer Levi Headman, in charge of the bridge over the Delaware River between Milford, N. J., and Upper Black Eddy, on the evening of August 24. Headman died in the Easton Hospital the same night after the side of McEntee's truck had jammed the helpless officer's body against the bridge.

The first Commonwealth witness, Samuel Mulli, of Milford, N. J., was called. He described the accident in detail as an eye witness of the affair. Dr. John J. Sweeney, of Doylestown, the coroner, described the nature of the injuries that caused Headman's death.

Lester J. Wallace, of Bridgeton township, called by the Commonwealth testified that he talked with McEntee and Headman after the accident. (Continued on Page 4)

She was buried today at the Convent Cemetery at Cornwells Heights. The Rev. Christopher Purcell was celebrant of the requiem mass and among the clergy present were the Rev. Francis J. Flood, the Rev. John O'Reilly, C. S. S. T., and the Rev. James Clark, C. S. S. T.

NET GAIN OF 395 BOYS SHOWN ON COUNTY BOY SCOUT RECORDS DURING PAST 21 MONTHS; MADE POSSIBLE BY THE DEVOTION OF VOLUNTEER MEN

Other Assets Built Up Include Quality of the Leadership — Strength of Units Also Improved—Camp Also Opened for Year-Round Activity

Bucks County has a growing and healthy boy. The Bucks County Boy Scout Council has made a marvelous growth in the past two years. The increase of 1652 boys in January, 1930, to the present number of 1447, a net gain of 395 boys, has been only possible through hundreds of hours of consecrated devotion on the part of the 764 volunteer men. The vast group of men and boys comprising the membership of the movement in the county is being given leadership by only three technically trained men.

The membership growth in the council is the only part of the assets acquired in the past two years. Quality of leadership, and strength of existing units has been improved. Thousands of hours have been spent in individual and group instruction to better train the leaders in their guidance of the youth. As with the church, the leadership must be constantly replaced and trained to take the place of those who have moved, become ill, died or who have excessive outside obligations.

In such a changing world, boy characteristics are constantly changing, and methods of handling of boys towards developing their character, and recognition of their civic responsibility must be taught the leaders so that they may be able to effectively cope with their boys. Training in general organization principles is given in training courses conducted at Camp Buccoo during March, April, and May. Quite different from the needs of the usual growing child, the Boy Scout Council is asking for no increases in funds, it is only urging that the excellent work be continued. With the present economic and domestic unrest it is quite urgent that the Scout Program of non-sectarian, non-military, non-political, BUT truly religious, highly patriotic, and essentially civic work be carefully developed and supervised in all parts of the county.

The building of Good Times Hall has resulted in the opening of the camp for year-round activity. Over 300 boys and man week-ends were spent at Buccoo during the fall, winter, and spring, and summer season. The Good Times Hall makes possible a warm and dry place during the worst possible weather. Developed by Henry Palmer and Cyrus E. Smith, it is a building of such permanent and rustic beauty as to add a distinctive touch to the camp site. On every week-end this fall, different units have been assigned to use the camp site. Hundreds of more boys and men will enjoy the camp site and buildings during the fall and winter. Getting the boy out of doors completely dependent on his boy leader not only teaches the boy self-reliance, but also respect and obedience to his leaders.

ONLY THE RICH CAN AFFORD THIS

(By "The Stroller")

In these days of depression when money is scarce, the value of the dollar and the pound is down, and pay days really seem farther apart than they are, it is not unusual to find energetic people trying to add to their income by doing any kind of work on the side or by putting forth greater effort.

Miss Dorothy Turner, secretary to Howard E. James, Bristol schools superintendent, realizes this, as far as pay of school teachers goes, and never misses the name of one when she makes out the monthly list.

An error was noticed this month, though, in the usually perfect account. Someone had been slighted. A second checking of the list by the one making out the checks for salaries, showed that Miss Turner in her care not to neglect any of the school "ma'ams," had forgotten herself.

And two months is such a long time between pays.

FUME BOMB TRIO CONVICTED AND GIVEN SENTENCE

Jury Recommends Mercy in Case of Charles
Knecht

NO FORCED CONFESSIONS

State Police Explain How The Statements Were Obtained
From the Men

DOYLESTOWN, Sept. 30.—The two Croydon men and one Edgely man charged with malicious mischief and accused of throwing fume bombs into the home of George Smith at Croydon were all found guilty.

Hershel Culbertson was sentenced to pay a fine of $100 and costs and to serve one year in jail. The jail sentence was suspended and the man placed on probation for one year with Antonio Russo as probation officer.

John Heller was given the same sentence as Culbertson.

Charles Knecht was sentenced to pay a fine of $50 and costs and placed on probation for one year with Antonio Russo as probation officer. He was not given a jail sentence.

It fell to the lot of the three, Hershel Culbertson, twenty-five, of Edgely; Charles Knecht, twenty, of Croydon, and John Heller, twenty-five, of Croydon, to be the first defendants ever to be tried in Court Room 2, on the charge of throwing fume bombs.

According to John Stewart, a member of the State Police located at Morrisville, the defendants in the alleged bomb incident were not arrested until almost a month later.

Officer Stewart testified that they had been working on clues and that it was on May 15, they made their first arrest. Officer Harry Christ accompanied Stewart to the various defendants' homes in order to place them under arrest.

Both officers in their testimony explained how they obtained statements from the three youths. The first, Culbertson, was arrested on May 15 at one o'clock in the morning at the home of his mother-in-law at Hulmeville, and both Heller and Knecht were taken to the Bristol Municipal Building, where they made confessions and later signed them.

Heller, one of the officers testified, said: "If the other two squealed, I'll squeal, too," and in his confession told how he stood beneath a tree about a block away and when he heard the crash ran into a field.

Knecht's statement which was made in the presence of Thomas Crawford, constable of Bristol township, who took the stand in court and told what Heller said before Bristol police authorities and the State Police, was corroborated exactly by his story to the court during his trial here.

Heller and Culbertson were re-arrested by L. Louis Rubin, while the other defendant, Knecht, had Howard L. James as counsel.

Denying that he was a member of a "wrecking crew," a term by which strikers who molest other workers' homes are known in mill parlance, Charles Knecht, twenty, of Croydon, a former employee in the Philco company, testified that he was standing in front of the howling alleys in Croydon, when Heller, Culbertson, and Marshoner, who is now serving a sentence in the Bucks County Prison, drew up to the curb and asked him to go along for a ride.

"Culbertson, who drove the car, explained that he must fetch his wife who was working in the Newportville mill and all three of us got out of his car and started to walk home," said Knecht.

"No one mentioned a thing about wrecking Smith's home," replied Knecht to a question asked by the Commonwealth as to whether they had planned to do any damage to Smith, who was working in a mill.

Hershel Culbertson, of Edgely, who went to meet his wife who was working in another mill, testified that Officers Stewart and Christ made him confess at the sub-station at Morrisville.

He denied having any knowledge of the affair or having gotten a milk bottle filled with a brown liquid.

Character witnesses for the defendants included the Rev. Francis H. Smith, who has charge of the mission at Edgely and testified that he had married Culbertson a few years ago, and knew that his reputation was unblemished.

Others were Joseph H. Minter, John C. Mayer, Francis J. Kirk, Joseph D. Kent and Thomas Donahue, all of Croydon, who gave character references for the youths.

Members of the jury included John W. Walker, Fallsington; Frank C. Worthington, Holland; Robert S. Stauffer, Milford Square; James A. Greup, Springtown; Maggie L. Steel, Quakertown; George Whelan, Oakford; Frank S. Dilly, Perkasie; Chas. W. Miller, Shelly; John B. Frank, Argash; George Carter, Jamison; John Nash, Point Pleasant; Lester Hinkle, Hilltown.

Mr. and Mrs. Turner Ashby and sons, of 319 Monroe street, were guests over the week-end of Mr. and Mrs. Francis Hafele, of Croydon.

MAKING THE PAYMENTS

The public needs an occasional reminder that while a great many people are out of work, and a great many more are working on part time or at otherwise reduced incomes, the great majority is pursuing its usual occupations and receiving compensation enabling it to live on the accustomed scale.

Such a reminder is found in the retail credit survey made by the department of commerce, which shows an insignificant change in the rate of payment on open credit and instalment purchase obligations this year as compared with the first six months of 1930.

The survey covered 25 cities and 483 retail establishments, including 104 department stores, 75 furniture stores, 51 jewelry stores, 92 men's shops, 51 shoe stores and 81 ladies' specialty shops. It reveals maintenance of a stable proportion as between cash, open credit and instalment sales, and a composite open credit collection percentage of 36.9 this year, as compared with 41.7 last, with an instalment collection percentage of 15.1 as compared with 15.4 last year.

These figures do not seem to support the alarmist prophecy during the prosperity era that when the inevitable crash came the "instalment-mad" public would be unable to meet its obligations and the whole credit structure would collapse like a house of cards. The predicted avalanche of forfeited goods has not yet swept across the country, which is pretty good assurance that it will not.

MORE MAIL

Either the goose-bone prophets have abandoned weather for economics or the depression has borne a whole new brood. There seems to be a great deal of gooseboning about business and less than the customary volume on weather probabilities for the winter.

Perhaps the most conspicuous of the economic goose-boners is Arch Coleman, assistant postmaster general, who finds his "signs" and "omens" in the mails. Since they are favorable, even skeptics will hope they are truly prophetic.

He has just read in a 15 per cent increase in the mails in a number of the larger cities a sign of approaching prosperity. In his consciousness it augurs more business and better times.

The assistant postmaster general was on solid ground when he said an increasing volume of all classes of mail portends better business, but singling out a greater volume of advertising matter might prove misleading. A sudden flood of direct mail advertising matter might conceivably be merely a sign that a drowning business is grasping at every straw.

Were the postoffice department to let down the bars on forbidden mail matter it might be able to report as much as a 50 per cent increase in mail deliveries without having materially benefited business. Such are the vagaries of mail.

It is devoutly to be desired, however, that "all classes of mail" includes a bumper crop of orders and merchandise deliveries.

The CZARINA'S RUBIES

by Sidney Warwick

© 1931, King Features Syndicate, Inc.

READ THIS FIRST

Once they belonged to a czarina, these blood-red rubies. Now they have lain hidden in the darkness of a cavern for ten years since that mad night when a revolutionary mob murdered their owner, Prince Murinov. They were safely hidden away by Federoff, Prince Murinov's faithful agent; and Federoff has now come back for them. With him is an Englishman, Frank Severn.

The jewels are the rightful property of Prince Murinov's granddaughter, now grown to womanhood. As a little girl she was sent from Russia with her mother to escape the revolution. Her mother since has died.

Severn has come to Russia at the young woman's request. He finds Federoff.

NOW GO ON

CHAPTER III

It had been no easy thing for this Englishman even to set foot in this close-locked land. But some slight past acquaintance with a Soviet commissar—in the old days he had been familiar with Russia—and unlimited bribery had smoothed away difficulties. Only in this country of spies, where suspicion was in the very air, he had not been long in realizing that his movements were watched. One false step might ruin everything. The Englishman knew he must always sleep with one eye open.

But now at length they had won through as far as the hiding place of the treasure at least. Under cover of night they had made their way secretly to Castle Murinov, now a dead place of blackened, broken walls and—memories.

As once before, ten years ago, Federoff, accompanied by this Englishman, stole down the dark hillside to that opening in the rocks, made again that perilous journey down over the edge of the chasm. With a thrill his groping hand found the casket. . . . There were tears of thankfulness and joy in Federoff's eyes.

Back in Moscow with the jewels safe in their keeping. The Englishman busy on plans for his return and on arrangements for Federoff to accompany him. Wheels to be oiled. More bribery and yet more bribery. Ways discussed and redoubled for smuggling those jewels out of the country, that if discovered in their possession would inevitably be confiscated.

Their plans whistled—then a dimpling whisper of danger to threaten everything.

SUSPICION

From his acquaintance, the commissar, the Englishman learned that suspicion was astringent; suspicion linking him with those lost jewels of the Murinovs. There were long memories in Russia, and his journey south had been noted—and his association with Federoff. Deepening suspicion!

One day he came back to his hotel to find evidence that his luggage had been secretly searched. Unseen forces already moving against him in the dark!

It became clear to this Englishman that it would be impossible for him to smuggle those gems out of the country; he would be searched before the frontier was reached, every stitch on him, all his luggage. If, as he now knew, the authorities suspected, the Czarina rubies would never reach that woman in England. And for himself—a Russian prison.

Only one way out of this impasse. "I can slip over the frontier into Poland—I have friends there—and from Poland I can make my way to England and meet you there with the jewels," Federoff said. "We must not be seen together again. But I have a plan. Listen."

"It's high time you were married and settled down," she told him.

An hour later the two men parted. They had made their plans—this last forlorn hope. Once again Federoff was to be the custodian of the Czarina rubies. If only he could get safely over the frontier, clear of that red shadow that was Russia—if only!

They gripped hands and parted. They were never to meet again.

BACK HOME

There had been no vestige of fog in London as Jim Wynter left the last open country; but almost imperceptibly as his car carried him down into the deeps of Essex a thin haze had crept up, grey, misty dimness, blurring the further distances of the low lying landscape.

Still, it grew no worse than this before he made Beggar's Court, that queerly named old house not far from the coast, he would not grumble, Wynter told himself cheerfully as he drove along the quiet, almost deserted roads with London and her myriad lights a far-receding horizon-line behind him.

To a man just back from the heat and glare of torrid lands south of the equator the cool, moist touch of the mist on his face was like caressing fingers. How often out there, under the skies like molten brass, he had dreamed of cool, misty English Autumn evenings such as this.

"Lord, but it's good to be back!" Jim Wynter had told himself that a score of times since landing at Southampton ten days ago. The eyes of this tall, sun-tanned man of 30, with the pleasant, good-humored, likeable face, reflected a deep contentment. England was a good spot. No place anywhere like it, really. He had been a bird of passage for the last four or five years as he ought to know.

And this time he was back for good. He had bidden a definite good-bye to that estancia far up-country in the Argentine. Quite unexpectedly the death of a remote cousin had struck off from him the shackles of a not too congenial job.

Not a fortune, nothing like a fortune, that he had come in for, though the sudden, wonderful feeling of independence it brought made it seem almost that to Jim Wynter—but good enough at least to enable him to throw up his job on that South American cattle-ranch and turn his face homewards.

It had been good on the eve of sailing from Buenos Aires to get that cable from the Graysons insisting that he must make his place his headquarters for as long as he liked. Bill Grayson, now doing brilliant things at the Bar, was one of his oldest friends. A good scout, Bill—and his wife, Molly, was a good scout, too. Real pals, both of them.

He had had a cheery, crowded ten days in England looking up old friends, whose name was legion. And Milly Grayson seemed determined to add to their number by flinging in his way all the pretty girls she knew. Milly was frankly a matchmaker, perhaps out of compliment to her own happy marriage.

"It's high time you were married and settled down," she had told him, "especially when there are not nearly enough nice men—like you, Jim—to go 'round'!"

He had laughed and told her that she was gilding the pill for a confirmed bachelor with gross flattery. Certainly where he had been living for the best part of four years, where to see a white woman was an event, he had little chance of losing his heart.

FLEETING GLIMPSE
Perhaps that was why he remembered Katharine Faring with such curious vividness—though he had only seen her twice, when business had taken him on that flying visit to New York more than two years ago.

Even now at that distance of time his mind could call up the very picture of her; the dark glory of her hair, its dusky shadows shot with wandering gleams of gold; the sea-blue of her eyes. And the lovely lilting voice, faintly un-English in its intonation—he could recall it now as if he had heard it only yesterday.

"MAKES NO DIFFERENCE TO ATHLETICS WHICH PITCHER 'CONNIE' CHOOSES TO START TOMORROW'S GAME"—COCHRANE

"We Have Supreme Confidence in Every One of Our Hurlers," Says Chamberlains' Catcher

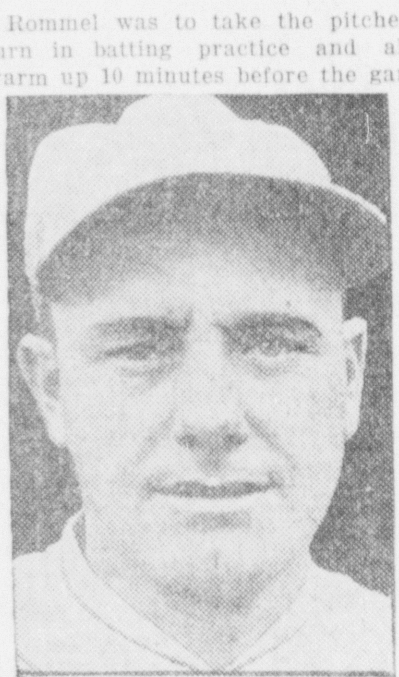

By Mickey Cochrane
(Modern Baseball's Greatest Catcher)
Copyright, 1931, by I. N. S.
ABOARD A'S SPECIAL EN ROUTE TO ST. LOUIS, Sept. 30.—If the general baseball public believes the members of the Philadelphia Athletics know who will pitch the first world-series game—and the fans must have this idea from the number of times we've been asked for the information—the cash customers are mistaken. Connie Mack alone possesses this knowledge.

Mickey Cochrane.

player into his confidence regarding the starting pitcher of an important game. Frequently he tells a hurler to be ready for a game two or three days hence, but as a rule pitchers aren't told they're to work until the day of the contest. And in world-series battles, Connie keeps his pitching plans a deep secret.

Last year Manager Mack did break his silence. But it was a paramount factor in his strategy to do so. We had won the first two games from the Cardinals in Philadelphia and were under the impression that Sportsmen's park. Early the morning of this opening St. Louis game, Mack called Eddie Rommel into his suite and asked him to go through all the actions of that day's starting pitcher.

started. Connie informed Eddie that this was only camouflage to keep Rube Walberg from worrying. For Rube was to start. He had been nervous all season, and often wasn't in the proper mental condition if he knew in advance that he was to pitch. As Rommel acted the part of the third-game hurler, Walberg sat on the bench, carefree and happy. Ten minutes before game time, Mack asked Rube to warm up in case Rommel got into trouble in the first inning. He did—free of worry. He never realized he was to start until the announcers spread the word through the park amplifiers.

Remember our first game with the Chicago Cubs at Wrigley field in 1929? Our team expected George Earnshaw to start. If not George, then Lefty Grove. Only one sports writer had the temerity to pick Howard Ehmke. Shortly before the game was to start, I went into the dressing room to warm my fingers. It was cold and raw outside. Earnshaw was sitting alongside the stove. He thought he was to pitch. When I returned to the dugout, Ehmke was warming up. I asked him why and he said Connie had given permission for him to start. It was as big a surprise to the A's as to the fans and scribes.

We don't know who will take the mound in the opening game tomorrow. Most writers seem to think Grove or Earnshaw will be selected by Connie Mack. Everyone's guess is as good as another's. Maybe Mack will pull another surprise and send Waite Hoyt, Rube Walberg, Roy Mahaffey or the veteran Eddie Riddle to the box.

Hoyt always pitches well in Sportsmen's park and has three world-series wins over the Cards. Waite is a smart, money pitcher with an abundance of intestinal fortitude.

We aren't worrying about our starting pitcher. We have full confidence in every one of our hurlers. It will make little difference to us whom Connie picks. We have a great pitching staff—a better-rounded unit than we are given credit for. They're pitchers—not mere throwers. And every one is capable of holding down the Cards.

Our club respects the St. Louis pitching staff. Burley Grimes is a masterful hurler, one of the greatest in modern baseball history. We may see him in the first game. If not Burley, then Hallahan or Derringer. But we'll let Gabby Street take care of the hitting.

them to contribute to Gorgy's defense funds. The State intimated a first degree verdict would be demanded, all prospective jurors being challenged if opposed to capital punishment.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Charlotte Settimo, the attractive widow of the slain man, prepared to take the witness stand today. She will give an eye-witness account of the shooting.

Five of the first witnesses called last night by Chester H. Rhodes, who is serving as special prosecutor for the trial, told of the chase and shooting at the picturesque little village. All five were on the Lackawanna station platform at the Gap and testified they had a clear view of Gorgy pursuing Settimo, firing as he ran. Each said the detective fired at the hotelman from a distance of 25 to 30 feet. The bullet failed to bring him down.

however, and they heard another shot after Gorgy had followed Settimo into the kitchen of the hotel. Later they saw the dead body of the slain man in the refrigerator room just off the kitchen.

The five witnesses were: Peter Pacific, gate tender, and Roy Shilling, a clerk of the railroad; William Hay, mail messenger; Oscar Hoagland and George De Crow, taxicab drivers.

The night room with many clamoring for admission. Women with children in their arms, ministers and prominent citizens of the local Italian colony were among the spectators.

Judge Shull promptly testified the room during the hearing of testimony after an audible titter at some remark of a witness went across the room.

"This is no place for amusement and the court will not be disturbed. If it happens again there will be no audience."

The selection of the jury was completed late yesterday after 82 talesmen had been examined. Prosecutor Rhodes Ohen, in a brief address to the jury, asked for a conviction on the murder charge. Edward C. Hess, an engineer, and Glen Lowry, a photographer, were called to describe maps and photographic exhibits that they had prepared.

McEntee Convicted On Manslaughter Charge

cident and that Headman, lying helplessly on the floor of the bridge, told him that it was McEntee's truck that had struck him. Wallace said that he ordered McEntee off the bridge, telling him that he would like to get the injured officer to the hospital.

The arrest of McEntee by Patrolman Frederick Reimpp, of the Edison sub-station of State Highway Patrol, was described to the jury. McEntee was located in a cabin back in the woods between 11 o'clock and midnight, the same evening of the accident. He was taken there by Leonard Shively, Jr., who testified after Reimpp.

The testimony of Patrolman Reimpp and Leonard Shively was corroborated by Howard Weaver, who also described the arrest of McEntee.

In his own defense, McEntee denied that he knew that he had seriously injured Officer Headman. He denied that he heard the officer call out "Stop, my God! you are killing me!" as was testified by Samuel Mullin, the first Commonwealth witness yesterday morning. McEntee said that when he had been stopped after striking the bridge, Mullin talked in an excited manner to him and somewhat scared him, so he started over the bridge, but did not know that the truck body had pinned Officer Headman against the bridge.

William D. Singley, who conducts a store in Bridgeton township testified for the defense that McEntee came into his store after the accident and that he seemed in a perfectly normal condition and did not mention anything about an accident. Thomas Durman, the last defense witness, also said that he had seen McEntee after the accident and noticed nothing unusual about his actions.
